Prepared Exclusively for Physicians' Prescriptions.

BILIOUSNESS.

Liver disturbance, more especially that known under the name of biliousness, is one of the great curses of the Anglo-Saxon race, and more especially that portion of it inhabiting the American Continent.

Having been engaged for more than thirty years in general practice, time and again—yes, hardly a day and scarcely a week passes but the problem of biliousness or liver inaction is or has been before me. How often does it occur to every practitioner to see case after case that shows marked manifestation of defective hepatic action. Now, I do not propose to lay all the diseases that flesh is heir to at the door of this much-abused organ, but I know that all unbiased observers of any reasonable degree of experience will agree with me in attributing a large amount of suffering and distress to the impaired function of the liver.

Some six months ago my attention was called to the preparation manufactured by the Peacock Chemical Co., of St. Louis, called CHIONIA, prepared from Chionanthus Virginica, Fringe Tree or Old Man's Beard, which though unofficinal in the U. S. Pharmacopœia, like many other unofficinal plants and herbs, may prove more valuable than hosts of those that are designated as officinal.

I have used the CHIONIA in quite a series of cases of biliousness with most satisfactory results, whether due to torpid liver, induced by errors in diet or regimen, or to preceding attacks of chronic malarial poisoning.

As the Peacock Chemical Co. justly claims, it certainly stimulates the liver and restores it to a healthy condition, without debilitating the system by excessive catharsis. It does not purge, but under its use the liver and bowels gradually resume their normal functions, and it has proved in my hands a most efficient remedy for deranged and disordered action of the liver.

PEACOCK'S BROMIDES and CHIONIA have given me such universal satisfaction that I will give a few lines on my success with them: The CHIONIA I administered in a case of biliary calculi of some five or six years standing with frequent biliary colics, which had been treated by three other physicians with no success. I was at that time a graduate in medicine, and also a new man here, but having had some excellent results in a then recent case, was called in to treat this, and with CHIONIA almost alone I have succeeded in preventing a single recurrence of the colicky attacks, it being now nine months since I took the case. The attacks occurred every two weeks or thereabout. The patient now has a clear complexion, and says she was never in better health than now. She takes one bottle of CHIONIA now every other month or so. I keep PEACOCK'S CHIONIA on my little table all the time, and carry it in my case most of the time.

K. S. PIATT, M. D.,

I gave PEACOCK'S CHIONIA to a young man whom I have been treating for liver trouble for a long time. I had used everything that I could think of with indifferent success. Sometimes he would appear to be better, but the improvement was only temporary. At first mercurials seemed to give him relief, but becoming slightly salivated I had to stop using them. Nitro mur. acid and a dozen other so-called hepatic stimulants failed to give any permanent relief. He became very low-spirited, lost his energy, skin and conjunc-tiva muddy and yellowish. He said he would willingly pay one hundred dollars for any medicine that would relieve him, and I finally concluded to procure a bottle of CHIONIA, as I had seen it highly recommended in similar cases. After taking one bottle the patient said that he felt better than he had for more than a year, and said he thought he would be all right without taking any more medicine. However, I gave him another bottle; since taking that he is entirely relieved, and I have heard no complaint from him, though several months have elapsed. I got my druggist to order a lot, and have prescribed it several times recently. I shall continue to prescribe CHIONIA for biliary troubles.

PEACOCK'S CHIONIA I tried in two cases of long standing biliousness in which it acted like a charm, clearing the complexion, relieving the engorged and non-acting liver, restoring the appetite, and healthy color to the patient. I think it will form a valuable addition to our remedies for biliousness and jaundice.

I prescribed CHIONIA in cases of infants and children who were attacked with malaria, bilious and jaundiced, this also acted like a charm, and the beauty of it is not disagreeable to taste, one of our greatest drawbacks in prescribing for children. I can therefore, from my experience, heartily recommend these preparations as being all that is claimed for them.

PEACOCK'S CHIONIA was administered to a lady who for several years had been a sufferer from bilious colic caused from partial stenosis of the biliary duct; she had just gotten over a very severe attack when she sent for me. I found her very jaundical and badly constipated, stools slate or gray colored, which they had been for years. I placed her upon CHIONIA, ten drops every two hours, to clear up the previous attacks. Her bowels speedily returned to activity, stools became natural in color and consistence, jaundice disappeared and she was in a fair way to health. She said she felt well, and that her bowels were acting better than they had for years.

CONSTIPATION.

The following case occurred in my practice in the latter months of 1891, and I have purposely withheld a report of it until now, in order not only to give the good results of treatment, but also and especially to show the permanency of such treatment toward a full and unqualified recovery. Mr. H. L., a farmer near Washington, Mo., about 40 years of age, in easy circumstances and enjoying good health previously, presented himself for treatment. Has been sick for over four years, and on examination gave the following data: Weight, 115 lbs.; pulse, 85 per min., irregular and rising, obstinate constipation, with abdominal pain and insomnia. A few months after being first taken sick, inaction of the liver, combined with a pronounced palavity of the muscular intestinal coats, resulted in constant spasmodic pain over the abdominal, hepatic and spinal regions; an action from the bowels was often delayed a week or ten days. Headache and pain of shoulders, arms and back were added. Sleep was obtained only at irregular intervals of short duration, during day and night, loss of appetite and flesh progressive, finally resulting in emaciation. Normal weight, 180 lbs; when seen, 115 lbs. Digestion was much impaired, his food consisted of articles in fluid forms as prescribed by the physician, a marked want of power in deglutition rendering the ingestion of solids almost impossible. The treatment prescribed when this patient came under my care, consisted of CHIONIA, as prepared by the Peacock Chemical Co., of St. Louis, in teaspoonful doses three times, afterwards four times, daily. To insure rest and sleep, PEACOCK'S BROMIDES, one teaspoonful, increased to one and a half, was ordered at bedtime, to be repeated if in two or three hours wakefulness should return. A few doses of the Hunyadi Janos Mineral Water were given the first two days, which acted satisfactorily. In addition I wrote a list of dietary articles and their quantity for each meal, enjoining exercise with the aid of a male nurse, and twice daily a thorough massage, anointing the body afterwards, under friction with a turkish towel, with codliver oil. No other remedies were used. Mr. L. returned to me after six weeks so much improved that he himself claimed a new lease on life. I ordered, however, a continuance of the treatment of CHIONIA and massage for two months longer, and towards fall the same year the brother-in-law of Mr. L., informed me that my former patient was fully recovered and capable of superintending the management of his plantation. PEACOCK'S CHIONIA deserves the credit of success in this case.

Mrs. B. aged thirty-five, has been suffering from torpid liver and constipation for many years, for which all the remedies recommended were tried, with but temporary relief.

I at once began the use of CHIONIA, in teaspoonful doses, three times a day. After giving it in this dose for two weeks, I gave it only twice a day, then one dose daily, and in this way gradually discontinued its use.

After taking the CHIONIA a few days, the yellowish hue of the skin disappeared, her appetite returned, and her bowels, which had not moved in three years without the aid of drugs or enema, now began to move regularly. It is now six weeks since she left off taking the CHIONIA. and since then she has had two normal evacuations daily.

From my experience with CHIONIA, I would recommend it in preference to all other preparations for the ailments mentioned.

I was called about January 1st, to see a boy two and one-half years old who had suffered with chronic constipation from birth and had been under treatment by other physicians from his birth until the time I saw him. I treated him until about April 15th, with anything but flattering results. When on becoming acquainted with CHIONIA I sent him a two ounce bottle with directions to give one teaspoonful three times daily. (Large dose for child, but he required nearly as much medicine as an ordinary adult to move his bowels.) When the two ounces were used up the mother reported him much better, and at the present time, under the same treatment, he is much better than at any time since his birth.

I must say that PEACOCK'S CHIONIA is superior to all other preparations of the kind. I gave it a thorough test, and find it to be just what it is recommended to be. The CHIONIA I used in a case of habitual constipation in a married lady, age 29, been married nearly four years, had two children. She said she had taken pills of all kinds to cause free action on bowels, but the more she took them the more she needed them, and she would go two or three days and have no difficulty. She could not take pills any more. I gave her PEACOCK'S CHIONIA, she says it helped her more than anything she ever took, and thinks by the time she takes another bottle, she will have overcome her trouble.

I have always been opposed to using or prescribing proprietary medicines. I had obstinate constipation with severe spells of flatulent colic. After taking CHIONIA three times a day in teaspoonful doses, for three or four days, the trouble was removed, or very greatly alleviated. Since then I have taken a dose once in three or four nights on going to bed, and have had but one bad spell since, and I think that was due to neglect of the medicine. Unlike many medicines of its kind it does its work kindly and without sickness or pain, and is not unpleasant to the taste. I think it a highly valuable preparation to overcome chronic constipation, and to relieve all those anomalies and annoying symptoms that follow in its train.

DYSPEPSIA.

I have become more than ever convinced of the efficacy of PEACOCK'S CHIONIA, in all diseased and torpid conditions of the liver. I have recently been treating an intractable case of dyspepsia; the case did not seem amenable to the usual treatment, and from certain symptoms, and a sallow complexion peculiar to liver troubles, I made up my mind that that organ was particularly in fault. Administering at first a purgative dose of calomel, I prescribed PEACOCK'S CHIONIA, in one-drachm doses twice a day. For the dyspepsia I had given at different times hydrastis, bismuth, zinci oxid. and pepsin, and acidi hydrochlor dil., tinct. valerian, bismuth. The patient could not say that any relief was experienced until she had taken the CHIONIA for two or three days, when she began to improve, and her manners and expressions from day to day indicated that she was gradually being relieved of the distressing symptoms which had caused her much suffering for weeks and months. I might add that her dyspepsia was that of the atonic form, with the unpleasant sensations, burning, gnawing sense of constriction, pain after eating, general debility and nervousness, with palpitation and headache. I am inclined to the belief that PEACOCK'S CHIONIA played an important role in the treatment of this case. Rest assured that I shall prescribe it when indicated.

JAUNDICE.

I first tried PEACOCK'S CHIONIA on myself and afterwards on several patients and my experience has been in every case without a single exception most gratifying. The liver is a very much neglected organ by many physicians, they deem remedies that are adapted for its derangement as of minor importance, but in this latitude where biliousness, jaundice, constipation and in fact all the diseases too numerous to mention now, and that are caused by torpidity of the liver, there has been urgent need of just such a standard preparation as PEACOCK'S CHIONIA represents. In summing up the results of my experience in the use of CHIONIA, I can candidly say that it has proven a perfect success, indeed almost a "cure-all" in all the intestinal diseases originating from a deranged action of the liver.

I was called to see an old lady, who was suffering intensely from biliary colic; she had had repeated attacks, was weak, emaciated and jaundiced, and her family thought she would not survive. After relieving the most urgent symptoms, the jaundice still remaining, I prescribed PEACOCK'S CHIONIA; this she continued taking until several bottles had been used. She has not required medical advice since last November, and her daughter tells me she has had no return of the attack, her complexion is clear, and her health good. Prior to my seeing her for a year or more she had repeated attacks, and toward the last recurring at intervals of two or three weeks. I give PEACOCK'S CHIONIA the credit for the relief obtained in her case. I have prescribed it on several occasions since for torpid liver, and the results were satisfactory. A few days ago I began taking it for biliousness and constipation, and will continue its use in my practice.

I had a very bad case of jaundice, result of catarrhal condition of bowels and bile ducts. I gave phosphate of soda for a week, at which time the skin and coma of eyes were almost green from infiltration of bile. Then I prescribed PEACOCK'S CHIONIA and to my surprise in two days the yellowness had almost disappeared and patient's appetite restored.

HEPATIC TORPOR.

Mr. C. presented himself for treatment September 10th, with following history: Been having chills ever since March; his family physician would break them up but they would return in a few weeks, quinine and chill tonics would do him no good, liver enormously large, bowels constipated with clay-colored stools, immediately after eating would suffer with severe pains in pit of stomach, not able to do any kind of work, and, to use his language: "Felt like he wanted to crawl off and die." Treatment consisted (the first week) of alternate doses of mercury with tr. nux vomica and counter-irritation over region of liver, then I put him on PEACOCK'S CHIONIA, with instructions to continue it for a month or more if necessary. He is now well and able to do heavy work, and does not want to die. I am very much pleased with the CHIONIA, and will continue to prescribe it when indicated.

I have used PEACOCK'S preparations and they have proven, where indicated, the most valuable medical agents, especially is the case with the use of CHIONIA for torpidity of the liver with the usual concomitants of clay stools, constipation, etc., all of which soon disappeared, and healthful action of the organ fully restored.

My patient, a man about sixty years old, had an enlarged liver of about two months' standing, so that when lying he felt the organ flop from side to side as he turned on either side. The enlargement filled the epigastric space, protruding past the edge of the ribs. The action of PEACOCK'S CHIONIA in this case was prompt and decisive. In about one week the swelling had materially diminished. The patient is now well. Shall continue to use it where indicated.

I was called April 15th, to see A. K., a wealthy farmer, who had been confined to his bed for about four months, and whose case had been pronounced hopeless by several physicians. I did not learn the diagnosis that the other physicians had given of the case. The first day I saw him he wanted me to make an incision into the stomach and see if I could ascertain what the trouble was, but I diagnosed the case as congestion of the liver, and I gave him PEACOCK'S CHIONIA and it worked like a charm. In a short time he was walking around the yard. CHIONIA is an excellent preparation in hepatic troubles.

In a case of neurasthenia where the nervous phenomena were greatly intensified, when a daily evacuation of the alimentary canal was not had, attended with constipation, torpidity of the liver and an irritable condition of the intestinal tract, from the too free use of drastic purgatives, calling for the administration of the most carefully selected remedies, to guard against the further aggravation of this feature and where my therapeutical resources had been sorely taxed with discouraging results. The CHIONIA successfully met the indications by stimulating the liver, increasing the flow of bile and exciting peristaltic action, thus overcoming the constipation in a physiological way. The result was so gratifying that I shall further test the remedy in suitable cases.

In regard to PEACOCK'S CHIONIA and its virtues generally, would say that I consider it one of the best and most reliable agents for functional, and no doubt, for some organic, diseases of the liver, that I have used in my practice for years, and can cheerfully recommend it to my professional brethren as a real desideratum and stand-by.

CHIONIA has answered well; and in debilitated conditions, complicated with congestion and inaction of the liver, CHIONIA is just the thing, because it acts on the liver without debilitating the patient. I find it better in my own case than anything else.

I had occasion to try CHIONIA in a disease of the liver, with hypertrophy and extreme sensitiveness of the cortex, and I am happy to state that the result of my treatment was most flattering, the liver having gradually resumed its normal functions, and the hypertrophy and tenderness of the organ entirely disappearing in the course of two weeks.

I must say that CHIONIA is the remedy par excellence where the stomach and liver seem to have no reaction after mercurials, but the tongue remains coated, with no appetite and a feeling of fullness in the stomach and large bowel (or colon). In these cases CHIONIA fills the bill, cleaning the tongue and restoring the secretions to normal, healthy conditions. I have used the fluid extract of chionanth, but have found trouble to get the patients to take it, but with CHIONIA I have had no complaint.

CHIONIA.

HEPATIC STIMULANT.

Prepared from "Chionanthus" for Physicians' Prescriptions.

USES :

Biliousness, Jaundice, Dyspepsia, Constipation and all Diseases Caused by Hepatic Torpor.

CHIONIA stimulates the Liver and restores it to a healthy condition, without debilitating the system by Catharsis.

CHIONIA does not purge, per se, but under its use the Liver and Bowels gradually resume their normal Functions.

In all Intestinal Diseases originating from a Deranged Action of the Liver, Chionia is the most efficient remedy known.

It is a reliable agent in the treatment of Chronic Constipation, as it does not dispose the bowels to subsequent costiveness.
